Positioning

Ultrarunning World was first published in April 2007 as an occasional magazine. In the Autumn of 2017, the magazine was re-launched with a new team and is now being produced on a 4-6 week basis.

The magazine was created to cover multiday races that fell outside the remit of the leading American magazine which tended to focus on trail running in the western half of the US. At that time there were no British or English language based publications dedicated to ultrarunning in Europe.

Ultrarunning World fills the gap left by other running publications covering 24 hour races and beyond on road, indoor, track and trail. One of the main areas of interest is the multiday race and these are covered on the sister website multidays.com though trail running in the UK has become very popular taking up 95% of ultras at this time.

Structure

The content falls naturally into a few broad and flexible categories, News, Race Reports & Results, Featured Articles, Health & Nutrition and Upcoming Races.

Featured articles promote the brightest and most impressive essays selected by the editorial team. Well-known guest speakers and ultramarathon champions bring depth and authenticity to the content whilst upcoming races announce details of new and regular forthcoming events. Sponsored advertisements provide a great opportunity to attract runners planning their schedules.

The content shares unique experiences realised by ultrarunners over super long distances and in extreme events. Providing news, views and reports not found in other running magazines, Ultrarunning World focuses solely on events longer than marathons - the ultramarathons and multiday races stretching from 50 miles to the 3100 mile race and the Trans-Europe stage races. It features news of popular races, training advice, articles covering a wide range of relevant topics and several calendars.

Audience

The readers are a range of 30-65 year old runners aspiring to go beyond the marathon from beginners to more experienced runners and to ultrarunners throughout the international community. Also of interest to race organisers, race service providers like caterers and event timing, crew members, equipment suppliers, therapists, medical and para-medical services. Recently arrangements have been made with the International Association of Ultrarunners, the I.A.U., the governing body of the sport, to provide news and updates of its activities.

The magazine appeals to both men and women with women being a significant growth factor over the last 10 years entering events in increasing numbers.

The publication offers an opportunity to connect with these groups by promoting a suitable and sustainable lifestyle through featured articles that explore the challenges that these super-long distance events provide inwardly and outwardly.
